

Bathroom Reader

As a way to commemorate the 50th issue of Uncle Bill's Bathroom Reader, our staff has devised a scavenger hunt that will test your legal researching skills and your knowledge of this law library. Everyone who completes the hunt will win 350 Lexis Nexis points. The first three to complete the hunt will win an additional $75, $50, or $25 gift card from select locations.

SCAVENGER HUNT GROUND RULES:

1. Each splintered-paddle clue contains the necessary information- a bluebook citation, physical description, or other identifying hints- that will lead you to the next clue.
2. Unless specifically stated otherwise, each clue can be found in, on, or next to a physical resource in this library.
3. Please leave the clues where and how you found them. Any person who moves or alters the clues in any way is disqualified from completing the hunt.
4. Please take a picture of each clue that you find. Upon completion of the hunt, our staff will check your photographic evidence to verify your hunting credentials.
5. Scavenger tips: Remember that you can find a book's call number (a number that corresponds with the book's location on our shelves) by searching for the title/author using the search engine on our <http://library.law.hawaii.edu> homepage. We also have library stack maps located at the front desk.

THE HUNT STARTS HERE!

According to Prof. Maxine Burkett in A Justice Paradox: On Climate Change, Small Island Developing States, and the Quest for Effective Legal Remedy, 35 U. HAW. L. REV. 633, 650 (2013), if small island developing states (SIDS), suffering from the unabated and excessive emissions activity of developed nations, wanted to bring a claim against the U.S. in domestic courts under the alien tort statute (ATS), the possible basis of that claim would be _____.

#Richardson Scavenger Hunt

Clue # 1

MAY THE BEST SCAVENGERS WIN!